

The Art of Faking Epidemics: Pittsburgh 1924

The faking of epidemics to peddle serums and injections is a natural extension of the fear-inducing, superstition-absorbing Pasteurian ‘germ theory of disease’ that was cemented in the early 20th century. It gained momentum for the rest of the century, until being turned into a trillion dollar industry in the 21st century by shrewd, ruthless businessmen such as Bill Gates and his backers of the same ideological bent.

What follows is a recount, in a 1935 book called “The Medical Voodoo”, of an epidemic staged in Pittsburgh in 1924, and it was not the only one, there were others too.<sup>1</sup>

The reader should note that this fake epidemic was pulled off at the city level, given the circumstances of the day.

The faking of epidemics has continued to this day, but with the added benefits of technological sophistication, the use of apparently impartial institutions and bodies—funded and/or controlled by the beneficiaries of the stagers of the epidemic—and a high degree of media centralisation and control that aids in driving the epidemic narrative, stoking fear and preventing scrutiny and dissent.

Faked Epidemic Pittsburgh 1924

In Pittsburgh, Pa., in the Summer and Fall of 1924, the business world received another sharp object-lesson as to the disastrous effects upon trade conditions of the medical voodoo in practical operation. This time the trouble grew out of a drastic and arbitrary ruling by Pittsburgh's Health Director, Dr. C. J. Vaux, that all school children who had not been vaccinated during the preceding two years, be revaccinated; and commanding all persons of all ages in Pittsburgh—residents and visitors—to be vaccinated under penalty of fine and quarantine in their homes and places of business.

Both these orders were shortly withdrawn, upon appeal to the mayor, but not until great numbers were coerced into being vaccinated.

The story of "Pittsburgh's Vaccination Scourge in 1924," and its direful effects both upon the health and business life of the city, is given in a report by Andrew G. Smith, legal counsel for the well known "Pittsburgh Health Club," an organization which is described as "sponsoring no school of doctors nor sect of religion, but all of whose members oppose compulsory vaccination of persons whose conscience or judgment revolts at the practice."

According to this report, the Pennsylvania law while it makes vaccination a condition of school entrance for children, carries no re-vaccinating requirement; and Dr. Vaux had no other basis for his drastic re-vaccination order than his own personal opinion about its necessity, "he being a two-year man," according to the Health Club's attorney.

"Yet according to figures furnished by his Department," reads the report, "there had been no deaths from smallpox in Pittsburgh during the nine years from 1915 to 1923 inclusive when there was no re-vaccination, and hence no immunity—according to Vaux—except for school children under eight years of age.”

And how much smallpox did Pittsburgh have in 1924 as a ground for all this vaccinating frenzy which resulted in 1,000,000 vaccinations in the city and its environs, as per the official statement of the Health Director? From the same source the Health Club’s attorney took the statement in his report that “from January 1, 1924 to Oct. 1, 1924, there were 111 cases of smallpox and 22 deaths, half of the deaths occurring among Negroes, and all of the deaths occurring between June 1 and Oct. 1 when the vaccination campaign was in full swing—although it was started in January.”

But while the smallpox death-toll was slight in this Pittsburgh doctor-made epidemic, the vaccination fatalities and disabilities were much more serious. The Health Club report cites 10 deaths from vaccination, giving names, ages, addresses and duration of illness—accompanied by photographs of the victims—and declares there were many more which their attorney was unable to verify because of the Health Director’s refusal to give him access to the records. Eight of these 10 deaths were among children, ages ranging from 10 months to 12 years, and duration of illness from two weeks to two months, but in every case the report read: “In perfect health until vaccinated.”

The direct money loss to the city of Pittsburgh by this vaccinating raid in 1924 was $3,069,616, of which the doctors received more than $2,000,000 according to the Health Club attorney’s estimate, and he said further that merchants, hotel keepers and others. . . Many of the merchants deserve to be losers, however, for they joined in coercing their employees to be vaccinated . . . People were afraid to come to Pittsburgh lest they be forcibly vaccinated. The Christian Endeavor Society, for example, failed to meet expenses at their Convention, and was short $11,756 because 1500 out-of-town delegates were frightened away by the vaccination bugaboo.”

“this does not represent the indirect loss to

One may not reasonably claim that three or four faked epidemics prove all health officials knaves;<sup>2</sup> but they are quite sufficient to show that under “the system” of complete, absolute and irresponsible control of public health service by one school of healing, the foregoing cited instances may be multiplied indefinitely, and the public be none the wiser.

The factors are all present which make such exploitation of the public health and the public purse possible, whenever a medical health officer may be found who is sufficiently corrupt or sufficiently fanatical, to set the machinery in motion for their accomplishment.

Fauci: 'No doubt' Trump will face surprise infectious disease outbreak

Anthony S. Fauci, MD, director of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases, said there is "no doubt" Donald J. Trump will be confronted with a surprise infectious disease outbreak during his presidency.

Fauci has led the NIAID for more than 3 decades, advising the past five United States presidents on global health threats from the early days of the AIDS epidemic in the 1980s through to the current Zika virus outbreak.

During a forum on pandemic preparedness at Georgetown University, Fauci said the Trump administration will not only be challenged by ongoing global health threats such as influenza and HIV, but also a surprise disease outbreak.
